Introducing Terzofoco by Oliveri.

Oliveri's exclusive collection of bespoke ceramic basins by Terzofoco are imported from Deruta, Umbria, a region known as the green heart of Italy. Deruta in the Province of Perugia is a beautiful territory, rich in clay soils perfect for ceramic manufacturing.

Terzofoco could only be born here. Lying on the banks of the Tiber River, Deruta is known as the capital of genuine Italian majolica – a special kind of highly decorative earthenware – made in a style of ceramic workmanship that is extremely recognisable for its enamel and bold decoration that still represents its true soul today.

Oliveri is proud and excited to present this bold new and eclectic range of premium artisan basins from Terzofoco.

Materials.

Raku Clay

It was the ancient Japanese masters who invented Raku ceramics, a working of clay intended for forging swords. Raku is as hard and indestructible as steel, beautiful in its material imperfection: those small marks left by the fire during firing – the so-called craquelé – make each piece unique - each firing is in fact a moment in itself.

Refractory Clay

Used for a variety of structural ceramic applications including building products, tiles, sculpture and pottery, refractory clay is extremely heat-resistant, won't deform or melt and has high mechanical strength, low thermal expansion, and outstanding abrasion resistance. Refractory clay is perfect for the creation of large, durable stoneware.

Fire-clay

One of the strongest clays of all, fine fire-clay loves excess: it fires at a very high temperature (1260°C) and for a particularly long cycle (30 hours). The result is indestructible, non-deformable ceramic, practically eternal.

Handmade by design.

Working patiently, taking just the right amount of time for each piece to reach perfection. Refractory, Raku, or Fire-clay stoneware... we place no limits on the choice of materials, techniques, and finishes.

The hands of the master ceramist move with their usual mastery, for a result that is both modern and classic, refined – one of a kind.
